but in a style which made the attribution suspect the painting has had a succession of owners It belonged to Tsar Nicholas I for a short time and ultimately to the art dealer Ren Gimpel who hid it with other artwork in a warehouse in London during World War II where it miraculously survived the Blitz It was not until the mid 20th century that an x ray examination uncovered the beautiful painting underneath an undisputed work by the great master himself The painstaking restoration process begun in 1983 took 20 years Notable art historians and conservators have contributed essays that offer an in depth examination of this exceptional and mysterious painting
