Theological Science:

Theological Science Thomas F. Torrance, 1996-01-01 The classic study which establishes a sound theological base for the future of philosophical science

Christian Theology and Scientific Culture Thomas F. Torrance, 1998-06-30 How do we react to the claim that physics must now be regarded as one of the liberal arts for in its description of the universe it sets the stage for the drama of human life If modern science has now become the dominant culture how does Christianity look within it What difference does the Christian idea of the contingency of nature make to science today What difference does it make for Christian thought and culture to move away from the old idea of the world as a closed mechanical system of cause and effect into the new idea of the world as an open dynamic system configured by the behavior of light the fastest messenger in the universe These are some of the questions discussed in the light of James Clerk Maxwell's discoveries of the mathematical properties of light and of Albert Einstein's generalization of the new understanding of light for a radically new and exciting view of nature that has made space travel possible and enabled us to trace the expansion of the universe back to conditions near its beginning This is not a defensive book about science and religion in the usual vein It is concerned rather with the deep mutual relation and respect of Christian and scientific thought for each other and shows how this relationship throws new light upon basic Christian doctrines This volume also warns against the dangers of a reactionary retreat from the rigors of scientific thought into fuzzy mythological interpretations of the incarnation and calls for a deeper appreciation of the Nicene Creed upon which all Christendom rests

Theological Science Thomas Forsyth Torrance, 1978-01-01

Reality and Scientific Theology Thomas F. Torrance, 2001-11-28 In this book the author argues for a rigorous scientific theology under the double constraint of the reality of God and the reality of the world of space and time Careful attention is given to the common commitment of theological and natural science to objective knowledge and the deeply natural relation between knowledge of God the Creator and knowledge of the world he has made Stress is laid upon the stratified structure of theology and the need for a radical simplification and unification of Christian doctrine Is theology the science of God and is it concerned with objective knowledge like natural science Is there a natural theology and how is it related to knowledge of God through divine relation How is the community of faith within which dogmatic theology arises related to the social coefficient of scientific inquiry What is the place of mysticism and of art in theology Does theology have a special notion of truth and does it have its own inner logic and structure These are some of the main questions which this book seeks to answer

Is theology a science? David Munchin, 2011-04-21 When Barth and Scholze clashed over the scientific status of theology Barth drew the conclusion that if natural science was to be drawn up in such positivistic terms theology had much to lose and little to gain by engagement with it A generation later Barth's translator and pupil Thomas Torrance maintained that science had changed enough to make an engagement more fruitful In works such as Theological Science Torrance sketched out the contours of such an engagement However at the same time the anarchic philosopher of science Paul

Feyerabend in books such as Against Method sought to deconstruct any notion of science as ultimately the protection of vested interests. This book analyses whether Torrance's notion of science can withstand this newer post-modern threat.
