The Culling One Perception:

Neural Mechanisms of Perceptual Categorization as Precursors to Speech Perception Einat Liebenthal, Lynne E. Bernstein, 2017-05-03 Perceptual categorization is fundamental to the brain's remarkable ability to process large amounts of sensory information and efficiently recognize objects including speech. Perceptual categorization is the neural bridge between lower level sensory and higher level language processing. A long line of research on the physical properties of the speech signal as determined by the anatomy and physiology of the speech production apparatus has led to descriptions of the acoustic information that is used in speech recognition e.g. stop consonants place and manner of articulation voice onset time aspiration. Recent research has also considered what visual cues are relevant to visual speech recognition i.e. the visual counter parts used in lipreading or audiovisual speech perception. Much of the theoretical work on speech perception was done in the twentieth century without the benefit of neuroimaging technologies and models of neural representation. Recent progress in understanding the functional organization of sensory and association cortices based on advances in neuroimaging presents the possibility of achieving a comprehensive and far reaching account of perception in the service of language. At the level of cell assemblies research in animals and humans suggests that neurons in the temporal cortex are important for encoding biological categories. On the cellular level different classes of neurons interneurons and pyramidal neurons have been suggested to play differential roles in the neural computations underlying auditory and visual categorization. The moment is ripe for a research topic focused on neural mechanisms mediating the emergence of speech representations including auditory visual and even somatosensory based forms. Important progress can be achieved by juxtaposing within the same research topic the knowledge that currently exists the identified lacunae and the theories that can support future investigations. This research topic provides a snapshot and platform for discussion of current understanding of neural mechanisms underlying the formation of perceptual categories and their relationship to language from a multidisciplinary and multisensory perspective. It includes contributions reviews original research methodological developments pertaining to the neural substrates dynamics and mechanisms underlying perceptual categorization and their interaction with neural processes governing speech perception.

Protest Policing and Human Rights Michael Smith, 2022-12-30 This book examines protest policing and the toolbox of options available to police commanders in response. The right to peacefully protest is intrinsic to democracy and embedded in British history and tradition. The police are responsible for managing public order and facilitating peaceful protest and this has not been without criticism. On occasions the police have found themselves in opposition to protest groups and there have been incidents of disorder as a result. In response the development of Police Liaison Teams in the UK has presented the police with a gateway for dialogue between themselves and those involved in protest. Drawing on two contrasting case studies the policing of the badger cull in South West England and an English Defence League EDL march in Liverpool this book explores the experiences of police commanders police liaison officers protesters counterdemonstrators members of local businesses and other interested parties It explores how a dialogical approach with all those engaged in or affected by a protest has assisted the police in balancing human rights and reducing conflict for all An accessible and compelling read this book will appeal to students scholars and practitioners of policing politics criminology sociology human rights and all those interested in how protests are policed Humans in an Animal's World - How Non-Human Animals Perceive and Interact with Humans Christian Nawroth, Luigi Baciadonna, Nathan J.
