Management of Gastric Cancer Paul H. Sugarbaker, 2012-12-06 Gastric cancer has been one of the great malignant scourges affecting mankind for as long as medical records have been kept Until operative resection pioneered by Billroth and others became available no effective treatment was feasible and death from cancer was virtually inevitable Even with resection by total gastrectomy the chances of tumor eradication remained small Over recent years however the situation has been changing Some changes have resulted from better understanding of the disease early detection and better management techniques with applied clinical research but the reasons for other changes are poorly understood For example the incidence of gastric cancer is decreasing especially in westernized societies where it has fallen from one of the most common cancers to no longer being in the top five causes of cancer death Still it remains the number one killer of adult males in Japan and Korea Whether the reduced incidence in western societies is a result of dietary changes or methods of food preservation or some other reason is as yet uncertain Improvements in outcome have been reported from mass screening and early detection more refined techniques of establishing early diagnosis tumor type and tumor extent more radical surgical resection and resection at earlier stages of disease

Gastric Cancer Research Trends Marilyn B. Tompkins, 2007 Stomach cancer also called gastric cancer is the growth of cancer cells in the lining and wall of the stomach Stomach cancer represents roughly 2 percent 25 500 cases of all new cancer cases yearly in the United States but it is much more common in Japan Great Britain South America and Iceland It is associated with high salt in the diet smoking and low intake of fruits and vegetables Infection with H pylori is the main risk factor in about 80 percent or more of gastric cancers It is more common in men A very small percentage of diffuse type gastric cancers are thought to be genetic Hereditary Diffuse Gastric Cancer HDGC has only recently been identified and research is ongoing but genetic testing and treatment options are available for families at risk Metastasis occurs in 80 90 percent of individuals with stomach cancer with a five year survival rate of 75 percent in those diagnosed in early stages and less than 30 percent of those diagnosed in late stages This book presents new and important research from around the world

Gastric Cancer Mitsumasa Nishi, Heizaburo Ichikawa, Toshifusa Nakajima, Keiichi Maruyama, Eiichi Tahara, 2013-11-09 Gastric cancer is still the most common cause of cancer death in the world although in most countries with the notable exception of the United States its incidence is slowly declining In statistical terms gastric cancer is therefore the most formidable of cancer types and its control is a pressing issue Recent evidence indicates that the conversion of normal cells to so called clinical cancer is the prerequisite for a multistage process which is intimately associated with an accumulation of multiple gene alterations including both oncogenes and tumor suppressor genes Gastric cancer is no exception in that it reveals multiple gene changes whose scenario differs depending on their occurrence in intestinal type or diffuse type gastric cancers This book was planned for publication by the Japanese Research Society for Gastric Cancer in order to shed light on basic research and clinical practice in gastric cancer The individual chapters written by a variety of experts contain numerous new topics related to all aspects of the disease including epidemiology experimental carcinogenesis pathology biology diagnosis and treatment It is hoped that this book will be of use in basic research pathological diagnosis early detection and therapy of gastric cancer We would like to thank the staff of Springer Verlag Tokyo for the excellent technical production

Advances in Esophageal and Gastric Cancers Reginald Kelly, 2021-11-16

Gastric cancer is the cancer that usually originates from the cells that line the stomach. The cancer may start as a polyp or an ulcer that initially may not cause any symptom or may cause bleeding or pain. Risk factors for gastric cancer are smoking, bacterial infection, and acid reflux. Stomach cancer can also occur in the proximal part of the stomach, which is close to the esophagus. Esophageal cancer is a cancer that primarily develops in the esophagus. Ways of diagnosing stomach cancer include barium swallow, which examines the esophagus, stomach, and duodenum; esophagogastroduodenoscopy; endoscopic ultrasound; computed tomography scan; fecal occult blood test, etc. This book brings forth some of the unexplored aspects of esophageal and gastric cancers. Also included herein is a detailed explanation of the various methods used for the diagnosis and treatment of these cancers. The extensive content of this book provides the readers with a thorough understanding of the subject.

Cancer Samuel Hellman, Steven A. Rosenberg, 1989
Precancerous Conditions and Lesions of the Stomach Ying-Chang Zhang, Keiichi Kawai, 2012-12-06

In this book, precursors of gastric cancer are described histopathologically, especially about the precancerous conditions and precancerous lesions of the stomach. In addition to those precancerous changes stated in previous monographs and textbooks, some newly recognized gastric dysplasias are proposed. In order to be able to objectively evaluate the atypism of dysplastic changes, achievements of morphometric studies were presented.
