Def: International Relations is The relationships among the world's state governments and the connection of those relationships with other actors (such as the United Nations, multinational corporations, and individuals), with other social relationships (including economics, culture, and domestic politics), and with geographic and historical influences.

THEORIES IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS INCLUDE:

1 REALISM

Realism (or political realism) is a school of thought that explains international relations in terms of power. The exercise of power by states towards each other is sometimes called realpolitik, or just power politics. Realism also suggests that states should and do look out for their own interests first.

2 IDEALISM

Idealism emphasizes international law, morality, and international organizations, rather than power alone, as key influences on international events. Idealists think that human nature is basically good. They see the international system as one based on a community of states that have the potential to work together to overcome mutual problems.

3 LIBERALISM

liberalism is based on the belief that the current global system is capable of engendering a peaceful world order. Rather than relying on direct force, such as military action, liberalism places an emphasis on international cooperation as a means of furthering each nation's respective interests. Generally, liberalism suggests in fact states can peacefully co-exist, and that states aren't always on the brink of war.

4 CONSTRUCTIVISM

Constructivism Argues that, rather than the outright pursuit of material interests, it is a nation's belief systems, historical, cultural and social that explain its foreign policy efforts and behavior. Constructivism generally argues that culture, social structures and human institutional frameworks matter.

5 MARXISM

Karl Marx was a Prussian philosopher and economist whose works put forward that societies could escape the self-destructive nature of capitalist socioeconomic systems by implementing socialist theory into their policies, both locally and abroad. On the other hand, Neo-Marxist theory argue that capitalism drives states to compete and attempt to dominate each other.

6 FEMINISM

Feminism as an international relations theory seeks to regulate the power derived from (or denied on the basis of) an individual's gender. Feminist theorists argue that having more women in positions of power could change things, as women may be more likely to believe peace through international cooperation is possible.

7 POSTSTRUCTURALISM

Poststructuralists always call into question how certain accepted 'facts' and 'beliefs' actually work to reinforce the dominance and power of particular actors within international relations. Poststructuralism doubts the possibility of attaining universal laws or truths as there is no world that exists independently of our own interpretations. Poststructuralists argue that 'knowledge' comes to be accepted as such due to the power and prominence of certain actors in society known as 'elites', who then impose it upon others. Elites take on a range of forms and occupy many different roles in contemporary society.

8 SECURITISATION THEORY

Securitisation theory shows us that national security policy is not a natural given, but carefully designated by politicians and decision-makers. According to securitisation theory, political issues are constituted as extreme security issues to be dealt with urgently when they have been labelled as 'dangerous', 'menacing', 'threatening', 'alarming' and so on by a 'securitising actor' who has the social and institutional power to move the issue 'beyond politics'.
